ABSTRACT

The relative effectiveness of current Job Corps vocational offerings was evaluated, and occupations suitable for addition to the Job Corps vocational curricula were identified. A Vocational Advisory Board was appointed at the beginning of the review project. Its major functions were concerned with research; members reviewed the research design and suggested methods to obtain and analyze data. A system for aggregating and analyzing information about Job Corps training offerings was developed for the review. Criteria judging the relative effectiveness of current Job Corps occupations were chosen. Training occupations were ranked on the six criteria and scored dependent upon their rank in relation to other occupations. A ranked list of 80 Job Corps training occupations was produced. New training occupations with potential for addition to Job Corps vocational training offerings were also identified. In addition to the three-page executive summary, these three attachments are provided: a training occupation relative effectiveness ranking list, a listing of new Job Corps training offerings, and a list of Job Corps Centers that provide training in each of the occupations ranked for relative effectiveness per the first attachment. ## EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

During FY 83, the National Office of Job Corps conducted a review of FY 82 vocational training offerings and an examination of labor market trends and projections relevant to potential vocational training offerings. The purpose of the review was to evaluate the relative effectiveness of current Job Corps vocational offerings and to identify occupations suitable for addition to the Job Corps vocational curricula. The review was not intended as an assessment of the overall effectiveness of the Job Corps program or individual center performances but rather to take a long hard look at which training occupations Job Corps should be offering to their corpsmembers to increase their employability throughout the 80's.

A Vocational Advisory Board was appointed at the beginning of the review project. The Board included representatives of industry, labor unions, the federal government, unviersity faculty, and a nationwide educational testing service. All the participants have extensive backgrounds in vocational training. Several members have been indirectly associated with the Job Corps program for many years. However, active Job Corps contractors were not selected to serve on the council.

The major functions of the Vocational Advisory Board were concerned with research. The members reviewed the research design and suggested methods to obtain and analyze data. The objectives of the study were discussed particularly possible outcomes and redirection of vocational offerings.

The Vocational Advisory Board met periodically and actively participated in the vocational review making major contributions to the work. The members' expertise and assistance was of substantial assistance in conducting the review and formulating recommendations.

A system for aggregating and analyzing information about Job Corps training offerings was developed for the review using labor market projections and occupational outlook materials from the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), demographic and placement outcome data from the Job Corps Management Information System (MIS) and training cost data collected from centers and national contractors. From these data criteria for judging the relative effectiveness of current Job Corps occupations were chosen and Job Corps managers assigned weight to the criteria dependent upon their importance in judging occupational effectiveness. The six criteria chosen represented a balance between placement, cost and projections data. Training occupations were ranked on each of the six criteria and scored dependent upon their rank in relation to the other occupations and the weight assigned by the Job Corps managers. Occupational effectiveness scores were computed by totaling each occupations scores on each of the criteria. The following are the six criteria used and the weights that were assigned.

| TRAINING OCCUPATION RELATIVE EFFECTIVENESS CRITERIA | WEIGHT |
|---|---|
| 1. Percent Job Placed | 4 |
| 2. Average Wage of Job | 1 |
| 3. Cost Per Job Placement | 4 |
| 4. Cost Per Training Year | 2 |
| 5. Absolute Employment Growth, 1980-1990 | 2 |
| 6. Percentage Employment Growth, 1980-1990 | 1 |

A ranked list of 80 Job Corps training occupations separated by the training provider was produced using the total occupational effectiveness score to indicate which current occupations were relatively more effective than others. The list was divided into three groups -- upper, middle and lower dependent upon the occupations rank in occupational effectiveness, (see Attachment 1). Since the analysis is based on national data, the implementation of the vocational changes will carefully examine potential offerings to be replaced on a center-by-center basis to ensure that a change at that particular center is as appropriate as the overall national ranking list suggests. Centers will be asked to examine those training occupations in the lower group and suggest alternative training occupations if performance in an occupation was also poor at the center level. Fourteen training occupations had occupational effectiveness score more than one standard deviation below the mean score of 78. Centers will be asked to replace these training occupations with those with high effectiveness scores or with new occupations identified as appropriate for addition to Job Corps unless the center can provide substantial evidence to warrant their retention.

New training occupations with potential for addition to Job Corps vocational training offerings were identified by examining Bureau of Labor Statistics Occupational Employment Survey (OES) data and choosing those who met the criteria of being high growth occupations that required less than two years of training and a high school or less education. Before being included on a list of potential additions, an occupation had to have a growth of over 10,000 new job openings and 18.5% overall increase in the next ten years and gain consensus approval from a panel of National Job Corps staff. Attachment II is the final list of suitable new training occupations.

The examination of BLS projections data revealed the fact that Job Corps is currently well targeted in its vocational offerings, providing training mostly in entry level occupations which can be considered high growth. By conducting this vocational review and repeating the process periodically, the national office of Job Corps can assure that the substantial majority of Job Corps enrollees have the opportunity to be trained in the occupations with the best overall performance records and potential in the labor market. It will ensure that new high growth occupations are introduced into the Job Corps system, and that demonstrably poor performing occupations are regularly identified, reviewed and eliminated unless special circumstances warrant their continuation. In this manner, Job Corps centers will retain the flexibility needed to tailor their training programs to corps-member's needs.
